The Fundació Joan Miró presents Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy, an exhibition that sheds light on the artist’s most personal side by reviewing the collections he created for his family.

Curated by Marko Daniel, together with Elena Escolar and Dolors Rodríguez Roig, the exhibition reconstructs the story of love and generosity that Miró began with the works that he produced and set aside for his wife and daughter and which ultimately resulted in the creation of the Fundació Joan Miró.

Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy features some 180 objects, among them eighty works that chart nigh on seven decades of his artistic career, as well as preparatory drawings, unpublished documentation and family photographs. This selection brings into a dialogue the artworks that Miró and his family have donated or deposited with the foundation from its early days to the very latest deposit of work this year, the most recent expression of the ongoing connection that has kept the artist’s commitment alive over three generations.

The exhibition is structured into five different sections that present the creation and evolution of the family collections, while at the same time pointing to the links between the selected works and cultural and historical moments in the twentieth century that Joan Miró, Pilar Juncosa and Dolors Miró witnessed.

With the support of the Fundació Banc Sabadell, the exhibition is accompanied by a publication that examines its central theses, as well as a public and education programme of in-person and online activities and events for everyone that explore Miró’s facet as a collector and the continuing relevance of his pictorial approaches.
Barcelona, 31 March 2022. Over the years, Joan Miró preserved works, drawings and sketches that enabled him to maintain an emotional link with his work and which also served as a tool for him to look back over his career and his evolution as an artist. As Miró wove his life project and his human bonds, he extended this habit to his wife, Pilar Juncosa, and his daughter, Dolors Miró, carefully setting aside key works that he produced for them and transforming them in turn into collectors. Miró’s love and generosity towards these two women continued as time passed in his grandsons, David, Emili, Joan and Teo, to whom the artist also dedicated a number of notable paintings.

Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy reveals an aspect of Joan Miró that remains largely unknown, that of a collector of his own work, which translated into the creation of three family collections of outstanding magnitude: his own, that of his wife and that of his daughter. The exhibition considers the creation and evolution of this body of work while providing fresh insights into Miró’s more personal side. Curated by Marko Daniel, Director of the Fundació Joan Miró, together with Elena Escolar and Dolors Rodríguez Roig, historians in the foundation’s Collections Department, the exhibition reconstructs a timeline of Miró’s generosity, from his private gestures to his loved ones to his resolve to share his thinking and his legacy through the creation of the Fundació Joan Miró, a unique space and a unique collection that the artist donated to the city of Barcelona.

Around the time of the creation of the foundation in 1975, Miró allocated to it a considerable part of his private collection, selecting above all his newest and most transgressive art for preservation in the contemporary art studies centre that he had envisaged. Immediately afterwards, and in full support of her husband, Pilar Juncosa donated a large proportion of her personal collection, also furnishing the museum with work dating from before the 1970s. This commitment the couple made to the Fundació Joan Miró remains alive today thanks to their descendants, who have followed in their parents and grandparents’ footsteps and have continued to place work on deposit with the foundation, including the latest deposit this year, consisting of fifty-four additional works by Miró and another five by Alexander Calder, thereby significantly strengthening the institution’s collection. The exhibition brings all the family collections in the foundation into a dialogue, reconstructs the stories and history that run through them, and pays tribute to the Miró family, who, thanks to their generosity, have helped to build the most important public collection of Miró’s work in the world.

Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy presents approximately 180 objects, among them some eighty works by Miró spanning almost his entire career as an artist, from 1910 to 1976, as well as preparatory drawings, documents that have never been displayed in public before and family photographs. This body of works, structured into five different sections, invites us to imagine the links between the selected exhibits and the cultural and historical moments of the twentieth century that Miró, his wife, Pilar Juncosa, and their daughter, Dolors Miró, witnessed.

_Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy_ opens with an exploration of the origins of Miró’s personal collection in a space given over to the oldest works in this selection, among them _Bosc de Bellver_ (Bellver Forest, 1910), produced when the artist was just seventeen years old. Miró always demonstrated a deep belief in his vocation as an artist and in the meaning of his work. From a very young age, and in sharp contrast with the conventions and customs of the day, he kept sketches, documents and works that he produced, demonstrating an extraordinary vision of the value that this output would have in the evolution of art. The group of works presented in this first section allows the visitor to trace the artist’s pictorial evolution from the time of his training at the Llotja art school and the early European influences of Fauvism and Cubism before culminating in Surrealism, with the sole work that he dedicated to his parents, _Pintura (L’ampolla de vi)_ (Painting [Wine Bottle]) dating from 1924.

When Miró met Pilar Juncosa, he extended his personal habit of preserving work to include his wife, in whom he found not just a companion for life but also the understanding and support he needed to devote himself to art. The crisis on the world stage was growing ever more acute, and against this backdrop Miró continued to flout artistic conventions and worked in series. The artist gave his wife one work from almost all of them, putting together for Pilar a collection of key pieces as a gesture of care and love. Notable among them is _Painting_ (1936) – shown in this second section of the exhibition alongside pieces such as _Grup de personatges al bosc_ (Group of People in Woodland, 1931), the first oil painting Miró set aside for Pilar – and _L’estel matinal_ (The Morning Star, 1940), the only gouache from the series of _Constellations_ that can be seen in Europe today and which Miró painted during the Second World War.

In 1930, the couple’s only daughter, Dolors Miró, was born. Becoming a father increased the artist’s sense of responsibility in relation to caring for his loved ones and ensuring their future wellbeing. The third chapter of the exhibition features a selection of important works that Miró deliberately saved for his daughter, such as the piece with which he began her collection, one of the twenty-seven _Paintings on Masonite_ (1936), the series he started around the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War. Dolors, who knew nothing of the tragic events taking place, devoted herself to her pastime of drawing in the company of her father, who would date her pieces and carefully note down his daughter’s explanations. Some of those drawings from Dolors’ childhood, with an iconography very similar to the one that Miró was using in his works of the time, are also displayed in this section.

The three personal collections – Miró’s, Pilar’s and Dolors’ – gradually increased to the extent that they grew into an archive of prime importance for understanding the course and evolution of the artist’s career. As the family grew, so Miró continued this gesture of love for the following generations, creating works and dedicating them with affection to his grandsons. Dolors had two sons by her first husband, David and Emili, and another two, Joan and Teo, by her second husband. In this fourth section of the exhibition, it will be possible to view together for the first time two pairs of works that Miró dedicated and gave to them: Painting (For Emili Fernández Miró), dating from 1963, and Painting (For David Fernández Miró), dating from 1965; and Personatge davant la lluna (Figure in front of the Moon, dedicated ‘To Joan Punyet Miró’) and Personatge davant el sol (Figure in front of the Sun, dedicated ‘To Teodor Punyet Miró’), both dating from 1976. The first two brothers, who lost their father early on, were present during many of the key moments of their grandfather’s career. Through letters, David and Emili eagerly followed one of the most important times in this period of Miró’s art: the trips to Japan during which the artist reaffirmed his taste for Oriental art, poetry and philosophy. The documentation in this section of the exhibition includes some of the correspondence between the boys and their grandfather.

With generosity as his main driving force, in the mid-1960s Miró conceived of four major projects to culturally enrich the city of Barcelona: the Mural at Barcelona Airport, the Monument in the Parc de Cervantes, the Mosaic on Pla de l’Ols, and the Fundació Joan Miró, designed by the architect Josep Lluís Sert in close dialogue with the artist. Miró’s wish was for his legacy to pass from the private realm into the public sphere, and with this intention he donated to the foundation not only a considerable number of his most recent works, such as his Burnt Canvases series, four of which are presented in this final section, but also work created expressly for the new centre. His descendants have remained faithful to his commitment and have continued to add to the string of generous donations that have made the foundation the foremost international centre for Miró’s work.

While Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy is open, almost all the exhibition spaces in the Fundació Joan Miró will be devoted to the artist. Some works usually displayed in the permanent collection rooms will be shown in the temporary exhibition rooms and others will once again be seen in the permanent collection, among them Flama en l’espai i dona nua (Flame in space and nude woman, 1932), the group of works Painting I, II, III and IV (1940-1973) and the Series Barcelona (1944), a fundamental series consisting of fifty black and white lithographs in which Miró channelled the tension and greyness of Barcelona during the post-war years in a universal iconography of tremendous expressive force in which the human figure is the protagonist. Today the Fundació Joan Miró holds a collection of work by the artist consisting of 249 paintings, 178 sculptures, two objects, four ceramic pieces, nine textile pieces, and some 8,000 preparatory sketches for almost all of his works, and virtually the entirety of his graphic and lithographic oeuvre. Thanks to another long-term loan from the Miró... family, the foundation also has the artist’s personal library among its collections. In all, this is a collection without parallel around the world that offers multiple possibilities for investigating and raising awareness of Miró’s artistic career and which is essential to any study or research regarding his work.

With the support of the Fundació Banc Sabadell, the exhibition is accompanied by a publication that features all the works and documentation in the show, as well as an essay by the team of curators that presents the central theses of the display, as well as hitherto unpublished material from the artist’s personal fonds. The volume also includes a conversation between Marko Daniel and Joan Punyet, Miró’s grandson, which paints a rare portrait of Miró the collector and gives us insights into the artist’s more personal side.

The public and education programme that accompanies the exhibition Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy will encompass a series of in-person and online events suitable for everyone (tours, activities, workshops, etc.) run by Julia Pelletier, Dario Zeruto, Mon Mas, Ignasi Blanch, blanca arias and Miquel del Pozo, among others. The activities will focus on two central concepts: firstly, Miró’s facet as a collector; and secondly, the continuing relevance of his pictorial approaches. Objects and practices that are both everyday and universal such as toys, books and postcards – all closely connected with Miró’s personal milieu – will form the basis of the proposals in the participative space associated with the exhibition, entitled From Home to the World.

1. Joan Miró: The Origins His Personal Collection

After working as a clerk for a time, Joan Miró decided to devote himself fully to art, despite his father's initial disapproval. The tenacity he showed at that moment continued throughout his entire artistic career.

Casting aside all conventions and established rules, Miró foresaw that his work could eventually act as a counterpoint in the evolution of art, and that he would be able to change the premises of art itself and help move them forward along unexpected paths. That was probably why, from an early age and throughout his life, Miró chose to keep all the preliminary drawings, documents and finished works that would end up comprising his personal collection.

The origins of this collection can be traced back to the period of his academic training, when observation of the natural environment was his main source of inspiration, along with the early European influences of Fauvism and Cubism, up until the culmination of Surrealism with the only piece he dedicated to his parents: Painting (The bottle of wine), from 1924.

2. Pilar Juncosa: A Collection for the Swallow

When Miró met Pilar Juncosa he found not only a companion in life but also the affinity and support he needed to devote himself to art. With this awareness, and given his affection for her, he gave her pieces of his work. These make up what the documentary sources describe as the ‘Pilar collection’, for which the artist usually set aside one piece from each series – works such as Painting (1936) and Morning star (1940). When their only child Dolors was born, the artist also made her a collector of his works, reserving key pieces for his daughter. Miró left a written record of these gifts by noting ‘appartenent à Pilar’ and ‘appartenent à Mlle. Dolores Miró’ on the back of each piece.

In the context of a worldwide economic crisis, Miró continued to break conventions in art. He worked in series, such as his Paintings based on a collage (1933) and Paintings on glass (1934), up until the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War, when he produced a series of twenty-seven Paintings on masonite. The use of collage and unconventional materials such as sandpaper, sand and tar allowed him to evolve towards an unprecedented form of early anticipation of matter painting.

3. Dolors Miró: His Little Girl

When his daughter Dolors was born, Miró became aware of his responsibility of caring for his family and ensuring their future. The three collections arising from his work – his own, Pilar’s and their daughter’s – continued to grow while the artist delved further into an increasingly expressive output, reflecting the tragedy of war. The family first went into exile in France, where the artist began his Constellations series, and finally took refuge in Mallorca.

Unaware of these dramatic events, Dolors Miró pursued her love of drawing in the company of her father, who, aside from dating her drawings, wrote down everything his daughter told him about what she had drawn – often with a very similar iconography to the one Miró was using in his work during that period.

Miró stopped painting with oils for a while to work on paper, and, seeking to escape from the horror of wars, evolved from an aggressive language characterised by distorted and anguished characters to the poetic escape he found in the order of the cosmos.
In 1942 the Miró family left behind its nomadic life of the previous years and began dividing its time between Barcelona and Mont-roig, in rural Tarragona. The artist continued paring down the language he had achieved with his Constellations and working in series, from which he kept pieces for himself, his wife and his daughter. During this period Miró also explored new media such as ceramics and sculpture.

Pilar and Dolors followed Miró along his artistic path, and they travelled to New York together in 1947, when the artist was commissioned to paint a mural for a hotel in Cincinnati. Both this trip and his subsequent visit in 1959 were key in the evolution of his art.

The family left Barcelona to settle in Palma de Mallorca, where Miró’s studio was finally completed in 1956. Designed by his friend the architect Josep Lluís Sert, it was a lifelong dream come true for Miró. Although he was unable to work in it at first, he organized and inhabited the new space, proceeding to review his entire output.

4. The Grandsons: Affectionately, Joan

The three personal collections – belonging to Miró, to Pilar and to Dolors – grew over the years, as did the family. Dolors had two children, David and Emili, from her first marriage, and two more from her second marriage, Joan and Teo, to whom Miró also dedicated several works.

The first two brothers, who had lost their father at an early age, closely witnessed some of the relevant moments in their grandfather’s artistic career. At the time Miró was immersed in the process of reviewing his former output and seeking new means of expression; for example, the techniques he learned with a variety of artisans enabled him to achieve his goal of moving towards monumental public art.

Among the most significant moments in Miró’s career were his two trips to Japan. During his first visit, which David and Emili followed avidly by correspondence, the artist reaffirmed his taste for Eastern art, poetry and philosophy. The influence of Japanese calligraphy would further determine his use of signs in his works from then on.

5. The Miró Family: The Bequest to the Fundació

In the mid-1960s Miró came up with four projects for the city of Barcelona: the Airport Mural, the Monument for Parc Cervantes, the Mosaic at Pla de l’Os on the Rambla and the Fundació Joan Miró itself, which he defined as ‘an open door towards the future and international cultural exchange’. Designed by Josep Lluís Sert, the Fundació reflects an affinity with Miró’s work resulting from an ongoing dialogue between the architect and the artist.

Miró was well aware that his legacy had to move from the private to the public sphere, and made it available to all by giving the Fundació not only a part of his personal collection, such as the Burnt canvasses, but also an ensemble of works specifically conceived for this new space. Miró’s generosity went hand in hand with the support and commitment of his wife. Accordingly, Pilar chose to broaden the initial donation with several works from her own collection, which she ceded as donations or long-term loans to provide the Fundació with works produced before 1975. This gesture, later continued by her family, contributed towards building the leading public collection of works by Joan Miró.

The catalogue that accompanies Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy provides insights into Joan Miró's more personal side. To achieve this goal, the publication features all the exhibits, as well as preparatory drawings, documentation and family photographs that enable the reader to follow the artist's path from the creation of a collection of his own – one that went on to become a family collection – to his wish to make his thinking and legacy universal by establishing the Fundació Joan Miró.

The exhibition curators – Marko Daniel, Director of the Fundació Joan Miró, and Elena Escolar and Dolors Rodríguez Roig, historians in the foundation’s Collections Division – explore the theses of the show in a vibrant essay and present hitherto unpublished material from the artist's personal funds. The catalogue also includes a conversation between Marko Daniel and Joan Punyet, Miró’s grandson, that paints a rare portrait of Miró the collector.

Available from 24 June 2022

Trilingual publication in Catalan, Spanish and English.
Public and education programme

Participative space

From Home to the World

There are objects and practices that are universal in character even though they belong to a family environment. In the case of Miró, we can see how some of the elements that constitute his most intimate legacy transport us to a collective imaginary. This is exemplified by the toys that decorated his studios and which we find in some of his works; by the books that were part of his personal library; and even by the postcards that he sent to his grandchildren while on his travels around the world. Play, poetry and memories are not just an individual inheritance here but a window onto a widely shared body of heritage. Entitled From Home to the World, the participative space is divided into a number of sections: a reading corner, a play area and a spot for creating poems with others. At weekends and during public holidays, the room will be buzzing with an activity to create postcards.

24 participants per session, prior registration required
Suitable for children aged eight and over

Participants will experiment with creative possibilities in four different areas of work: projections, photocopiers, light table and an ‘archive of everyday objects’. At the same time, they will explore the concepts of scale (big, small and human) and will create lines, shapes and textures by using drawing and painting equipment: papers of different qualities, graphite and colour pencils, crayons, pastels and gouaches. The result will be a collage that will encapsulate the entire process and which will be dedicated to a loved one.

Archiving, Conserving, Hiding

Practical workshop on the role of the art curator led by Julia Pelletier and Darío Zeruto
Jacques Dupin Library – Documentation Centre of the Fundació Joan Miró
7 May from 10.00 am to 2.00 pm

Workshop in which participants will take on the role of art ‘curators’. Each participant will create six small-format images inspired by the titles of paintings in the Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy exhibition. They will each be given a plan of the exhibition showing where the titles of the reference pieces by Miró are located.

When the workshop is over, they will be invited to visit the exhibition so that they can compare their works with Miró’s.

Programme:

1- Creation of the works.
2- Introduction of the ‘role of the curator’.
3- Archiving the miniature works using a standard cataloguing model similar to that used by the Collections Department at the Fundació Joan Miró.
4- Making two books (each participant will choose a model) in which to preserve and hide the works.
Appartenant à l’amour

Tour-cum-workshop in the exhibition rooms, led by blanca arias, organised as part of the LGTBI Museums programme

9 July at 11.30 am

Suitable for everyone

In this combined tour and workshop, the artist and researcher blanca arias will be exploring different ways to identify a fixation with love as a creative force in Miró’s work. Together, we will use images to chart a map of counter-normative desires that range from eroticism to spirituality and include admiration, recognition in the other and even alchemy. Once we have followed the trail of Miro’s expressions of love – present in the act of painting and in that of collecting – we will translate into words or images our professions of love and will send them to our chosen recipient or bury them on Montjuïc in a collective ritual of celebrating our feelings.

Of Flesh and Blood

Workshop for families with blanca arias, organised as part of the LGTBI Museums programme

9 July at 5.30 pm

This workshop for families aims to address Miró’s work by embodying the beings that inhabit it. A selection of some of the pieces in the Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy exhibition will form the basis of this activity, in which participants will be invited to create their own costume of one of the characters or objects previously discussed.

Once transformed, we will seek out the strange relationships that could form between the chosen figures in order to ‘queerise’ the relationship between us, the objects and the spatial dimension. Why can’t a human fall in love with a star? Why can’t a bottle and a bird be friends?
In front of the Moon, in front of the Sun
Activity for families designed and led by the architect and educator Miquel del Pozo
30 April at 5.30 pm
Duration: 1 h 30 min
Exhibition rooms and room 14
Families with children aged five and over
Limited to twenty-five people

Activity for families in which we will be creating narrated and drawn stories based on the works Miró gave to his grandsons. An invitation to interpret artworks as a way to inspire our imagination and share new ways of looking.

Stories in the Cards. Intergenerational narration activity
Joint and participative creation of classic tales. Oral narrative and illustration activity
29 May
11.30 am to 1.30 pm
Duration: 2 h
The foundation’s auditorium and courtyards
For every generation and type of family: grandparents, parents, uncles and aunts, sons and daughters, grandsons and granddaughters, nephews and nieces
Capacity for 180 people

Activity to discover families’ most intimate oral legacy. The narrator Mon Mas and the illustrator Ignasi Blanch will lead this activity in which oral narration and illustration in the moment will bring to life the popular stories told generation after generation.
When participating families arrive at the Fundació Joan Miró, they will be given envelopes of cards and will have to complete a very special set created by Ignasi Blanch. This will be the start of the activity in which Mon and Ignasi will reveal the popular tales most often told in our homes. Once the story is over, the session will close with an artistic creation activity.

Conversation between Joan Punyet and Marko Daniel

The Fundació Joan Miró’s channels

The exhibition Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy is a new expression of Miró’s generous desire to create the foundation. The construction of the building at that time was supported by donations and deposits of unquestionably important works by the artist and his family. Now, Miró’s descendants have chosen to repeat that initial commitment, adding to their earlier deposits by contributing nearly sixty further works to the permanent collection.

Marko Daniel, Director of the Fundació Joan Miró, and Joan Punyet Miró, the artist’s grandson, invite us to take a tour of the exhibition that celebrates this very special relationship. In an accessible manner, they will introduce us to a selection of representative pieces and share with us their knowledge, experience and personal impressions.

Collection of Affective Objects. Virtual Participative Space

Miró collected everyday objects such as kitchen utensils and other wooden tools, postcards, pottery, roots, stones, bones, pieces of wood, toys, Nativity Scene figurines and siurells (clay figurines featuring a whistle) from Mallorca, gathering them together in his studios in Mont-roig, Barcelona, Paris and Mallorca.

There are things that have a special significance for us, items for which we feel a particular affection unrelated to their financial worth or their aesthetic value. When we look at them, they remind us of a person, a moment in the past or a place. In some way, they embody a memory with which we wish to retain a connection: their presence and the possibility of picking them up, touching, smelling and caressing them keep the memory fresh. Owning them is evidence that the event we associate them with took place or that an emotional relationship was real. We invite you to use the hashtag #LlegatMiró to share on social media images of objects of special sentimental importance to you and which you would find it hard to dispose of.

Creative Families

Have you ever altered an image you liked by painting or drawing on it, cutting it out or sticking bits of paper to it? Miró painted on works depicting landscapes created by other people.

We invite you to give a new form to pictures on paper that you find at home in an activity associated with the exhibition Miró. His Most Intimate Legacy, taking as the basis for this exercise the work Personatge a la sortida del sol al costat d’un riu (Figure at Sunrise next to a River, 10 July 1965).

Creative Families is an activity for experimenting in art as a family. In the foundation's rooms, families can discover the artist's universe and, once back at home, using the website, can put their own creativity to the test.
